Making Comrades of Children.

"The peril of the homelessness lies in the fact that parents do not take the pains to understand their children. They are out of sympathy with them. They do not encourage anything like comradeship. They reject or repress any attempts at exchanging confidences. The father forgets that he was once a boy. Having lost the enthusiasm of boyhood, he looks with contempt upon the temptations and follies of youth. How is he treating his boy? He condemns his associates in unmeasured terms; he ridicules his cherished plans. When, in boyish admiration, the lad explains his presidential candidate, the father jeers at the choice and knocks the idol from its pedestal. Does this father realize what he has done? He has practically rendered his boy homeless. That boy will leave home to find sympathy and companionship. In short, he will form the nucleus of a street-corner gang, and be happy in it."—Suburban Life Magazine for September.

"What! arrested for defacing public property?"
"Yes," a policeman caught him cutting the corners."—September Woman's Home Companion.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

An Electrical Swing Will Be Seen in "Three Twins" Show.

"Three Twins" comes to the Barre opera house on Monday, September 9. This piece is conceded to be one of the smartest musical comedies that has been produced in many years. The book is by Charles Dickson, the lyrics by O. A. Hauerbach, while Karl Hoschna is responsible for the music.

One of the many scenic novelties is an electrical swing, weighing over 5,000 pounds and illuminated with over 2,000 incandescent lights. The company carries three machinists for the handling of this one effect.

There are a great many song hits, including "The Yama Yama Man," "Cuddle Up a Little Closer Lovey Mine," "Boo Hoo Tee Hee," "Good Night," and "The Girl Up There."

Crawford Parlor Stoves

Crawford "Parlor"

"Crawford Parlor." A genuine indirect draft stove with full return flue; the smoke passes down between the firepot and the outside casing of the stove to a flue beneath the ashpan, thence up and out through the back smoke pipe to the chimney, giving more heat and burning less coal. The grate center slides forward for dumping. Large clinker door; wide, deep ashpan; dust damper; nickel rails removable. Four sizes.

"Tropic" Crawford

"Tropic Crawford." With or without down draft back pipe. Draw center grate. Best stove made at the price. Nickel rails removable.

Crawford "Wood Parlor"

Crawford "Wood Parlor." In this new heating stove for wood the front door swings open to give the effect of a fire-place. By moving a slide in this door the fire can be seen without opening the door itself. The slide openings are protected by wire gauze. The main top swings to one side and underneath it is a large plate that lifts to admit large pieces of wood.

This stove is made in both direct and indirect draft styles. It is strongly made and very handsome. Three sizes, to burn 19, 22 or 25 inch lengths.

THE TIDELESS MEDITERRANEAN.

Many Interesting Contrasts Between the Open Ocean and the Greatest Landlocked Seas.

The Mediterranean sea, which has lately been the center point of interest, is commonly described as tideless, and the description is correct, at any rate of its eastern end. Navigators like Jonah and St. Paul knew nothing of tides. The word does not even occur in the Bible.

It was no doubt the amazement felt by ancient Greek mariners, accustomed to the even level of the tideless sea, at sight of the tidal bore of the Seine at Rouen which inspired the story of amorous Neptune pursuing the nymph inland. The sea god, balked of his prey by the young lady's parents, Ceres and Bacchus, still rushes madly into the estuary twice in the twenty-four hours, and is apparently engaged in chasing innumerable other nymphs with the same zeal into every estuary on the Atlantic.

Science has discovered a less romantic explanation of the tides in the influence of the sun and moon. These, operating in the ratio of one to four, produce spring tides when pulling together and neaps when in opposition.

The tidal contrast at Southend and the mightiest effort of the Bristol channel at Chertsey are alike dwarfed by the eccentricities of the Bay of Fundy, that cul de sac between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick into which the Atlantic rushes with pent-up fury, giving rise to such effects as the bore at Moncton, the Reversible Falls at St. John, and the lightning transformation of Windsor from a swamp to a deep water harbor in the course of a few minutes. As, however, it is a harbor for only four hours and a swamp for twenty, the economic utility of Windsor is qualified.

Remarkable as are these expressions of the ocean to eyes unaccustomed to such freaks of tidal equilibrium, it must be confessed that the tourist is certain to encounter disappointment if he expects too much. Thus the tides of the Bay of Fundy are absolutely unnoticeable on the steamers which cross from Digby to St. John.

The Reversible Falls at the latter port, seen immediately after high water from the suspension bridge overhead, are just worth the short drive from the city; but the much advertised Moncton bore is a poor lion in the light of day, though, heard rather than seen, at night, the coming of the wave over the mudflats inspires an agreeable feeling of fear in those gathered on the little quay for the purpose. Its only rival is said to be in far Cathay, but from all accounts the Chinese bore is a far more formidable flood.

It is virtually in landlocked seas like the Baltic, Mediterranean and Euxine that we must look for absence of tides, particularly in those portions remote from their outlet. At Stettin, Symrna and Batouin there is no tide whatever. Even at Cannes, the ebb is so feeble that a strong wind from the sea all but arrests it. This regular ebb and flow of tides must not be confused with the operation of currents which, from the Gulf stream, most considerable of them all, to the slightest drift on our own coasts, are due to very different influences.

Even from the Mediterranean and Black seas very strong currents emanate. The currents off Gibraltar are by no means disregarded by sailors, and the pace of the Bosphorus, opposite of Bebek, suggests a millrace and calls for the greatest caution in navigating small boats.

Those who live on the shores of the Baltic and Mediterranean have taken advantage of the absence of tides to erect all manner of fixed bathing places, thereby dispensing with the cumbersome and comfortless bathing machine, which is moved to and fro on the foreshore.—London Globe.
